Busy at 8am. Empty by 5pm.

Kopi Senja (fictional) runs 12 neighbourhood outlets. Mornings are a commuter rush; the afternoon is quiet even though the brand is literally named after dusk. The name is an unused asset.

- Morning traffic is price-driven and loyal to whoever is closest
- Afternoons compete with malls, gyms and the commute home
- The name 'senja' (dusk) already carries a feeling people post about
- Goal: make 4–7pm a reason to visit, not a gap to fill with discounts

Golden Hour Club

THE BEST PART OF THE DAY STARTS WHEN WORK ENDS.

We reposition Kopi Senja from a commuter pit-stop to the city's after-work ritual. Every outlet becomes a 'golden hour' spot: warm light, a dusk-only menu, and creators who make 5pm the moment you look forward to.

> “Clock out, glow up — see you at Senja.”

THE STORYLINE

We build narratives — here is the arc · 6 weeks, 4 beats

Tease

Creators post their 'unplanned 5pm' — sunsets, commutes, the itch to stop somewhere.

THAT'S ME.

Reveal

Golden Hour Club launches: dusk-only menu, warm-light corners, a stamp card that only works after 4pm.

WAIT, WHERE IS THAT?

Ritual

Weekly creator meet-ups and 'clock-out' playlists turn visits into a habit.

THIS IS MY SPOT.

Belong

Regulars' stories become the content; the best ones get their own drink named after them.

I'M PART OF THIS.

HOW WE TACKLE IT

Strategic approach · Tease → Launch → Sustain

01

Own a time slot

Every asset says 4–7pm. We sell a moment, not a menu.

02

Creators as regulars

Micro creators who live near outlets post repeatedly, not once — repetition builds the ritual.

03

Make it physical

Light, playlist and stamp card make the idea visible in-store, so content and reality match.

WHY RANTAI

Ideas before price lists. We build narratives.

01 · Insight first

Every campaign starts from a human truth about the audience, not a product feature.

02 · Story second

We turn that insight into a named idea with an arc creators can actually tell.

03 · Craft always

Briefing, production and reporting run on checklists, so the idea survives execution.

NEXT STEPS

Let's make 5pm the best hour in town.

- Pick the outlets for the launch wave
- Confirm creator availability + anchor rate
- Lock the dusk menu and shoot dates
- Kick off within 7 days of sign-off
